Special Issue on Immigrant Diversity and Political Participation

Scheduled for distribution in the Fall of 2002, the Journal of International Migration and Integration is pleased to announce this special issue entitled “Immigrant Diversity and Political Participation in Select North American and European Cities.” This issue is guest edited by Drs. Anver Saloojee and Anja van Heelsum.

Some of the important themes it explores include the way in which newcomer immigrant communities experience and engage in civic participation. The following are but a few of the questions explored in this special issue: Is it important for political and administrative institutions to reflect the ethno-racial diversity of the citizenry? Do immigrant communities experience barriers as they seek to participate in meaningful ways in civic politics? What is the relationship between civic engagement and formal political participation? What do immigrant communities identify as the priority issues on the municipal landscape and how do they perceive municipal politicians and administrators’ responses to these issues?
